Couch Combat Feedback

Gameplay:

Being the first game ever to pull in shareable content to drive player engagement across participating devices enables sharing happening on sharing competitions as well as in fun looking moments that enhance the experience of the player based on game events without any additional or unexpected hassle.

I love creators that truly understand participation is the holy grail and engagement is the foundation of publishing and that's true here as well. You can share your progress or benchmark your gameplay and other players can judge your prowess from the rankings as they happen. Notable on the roadmap for 2012 is deep integration of leaderboards with sharing game content to drive participation and encourage engagement in the couch roleplaying gaming community.

My only gripe has been with the process of integrating sharing across devices you need to play different versions of the game that are exactly the same otherwise you have no way of getting your data from couch game to mobile game except for tedious manually building the couch database locally.

The lack of interaction makes it impossible to "put it on a pedestal and gaze down on it with some sense of righteousness." Simply put: I want to play Couch Combat and it's not happening. So I'll do what any sensible person would do and get playing right now.

The theme park inspired micro context within sharing competitions allows for less engagement in games as it only takes a few moments of gameplay to win

is where two people fling themselves on the couch for entertainment and fun. They might even go to a mutual friend's house and agree to do this for hire if the workload is light. The ladies get decorated with their favorite alcoholic beverage and food while guests watch. The males wear nothing but their underwear for the purposes of accenting. They crowd around their friends while others fill in the gaps. Anything goes! Couch Combat is where two people fling themselves on the couch for entertainment and fun.
