Check out our official review of the game and the videos below: The gameplay reflects the level of immersion and authenticity within this realistic simulation. It has been a goal to perfect this kind of gameplay with the selection of the right features – including Player Impact Engine, Dribbling, and Ball Physics. The gameplay will be constantly evolving and adding new features, but we know that the combination of simulations, visuals and real players are what makes FIFA the world’s best football game. It is our hope that “hypermotion” will only serve to elevate FIFA’s gameplay further. See you on the pitch this August. -Clint Dempsey, FIFPro World Players’ Representative

A senior Fifa executive says that the game’s new “hypermotion” technology will take the game to an entirely new level, and claims that there will be “no game this year” as good as it. The new technology, which uses real-life player movement data to determine how players move, tackles and shoots the ball, is designed to allow coaches to see more closely what their players can and cannot do in real-life football. The game has been a long time in development – according to EA, it has taken eight years to develop and has used data from “22 real-life matches, including the 2015 World Cup, to create a more robust, realistic experience” “FIFA 16’s gameplay engine offers a truly authentic and immersive experience,” said Alex Bunjko, EA FIFA Game Director, in a press release. “We’re building upon that with a new gameplay mechanic using real-life player movements – now on a much deeper level – that will allow us to create even more realistic simulations of football. We’re excited to share it with the world.” The new “hypermotion” technology, which has been used by EA in the last couple of years, uses data collected from the camera in real-life football matches. It has been used for years, but this time it has gone into overdrive, and has allowed EA to produce the most powerful football game that it has ever made. It has been designed to produce a different level of sensation and immersion within the game. EA claims that the data will be used to “create a truly immersive and authentic experience”, and that “players will feel more connected to the game.”

FIFA vs Sports Interactive, the independent videogame development studio behind the critically acclaimed action/football series, is facing a new threat from an unexpected quarter. Sports Interactive's third management team, who hold the exclusive rights to the FIFA brand and have taken the EA SPORTS name off the face of the series, is taking the company public through a crowdfunding campaign in the UK. Their aim is to finance the next generation of games and IP which has been building up in Sports Interactive's Edmonton studio over recent years. However, the Games for Windows Live-powered Ultimate Team mode has come under heavy criticism, along with the naming rights which was sold to a football television network at the start of this year. Our leaders have also revealed that they are on the verge of securing a £5m investment deal from a big name company which would create an entirely new studio dedicated to making the next instalment in FIFA. While this deal won't be made public until it's signed in September and at this stage that's all we know, we decided to ask the people closest to the situation for some insight into this unique situation. Those individuals were former Manager Bob Hoskins, Club Football Manager and Board Director of Football Operations, David Morley, and Investor

Dennis Enright. Who are the current owners of FIFA and the EA brand? David Morley: The current owners are EA, based in Redwood City, California, and The Rights Holder Ltd, based in London, UK. It's been a very closely guarded secret, but the CEO of EA and the Chairman of the Board of Directors are both named Mark Markil, although you'll have to whisper the name if you're not a lucky few. I believe Markil is a very clever businessman. Bob Hoskins: The Rights Holder Ltd is owned by EA. Dennis Enright: I can't confirm or deny who the bc9d6d6daa

Synchronous spinal tumors are very rare. Because of the rarity of such cases, the optimal treatment has not yet been established. We report on a 33-year-old patient with multiple lesions of the epidural space and bone, which manifested as focal deficits. One lesion at the level of T6 was associated with bony metastases, and another at T9, mimicking intradural extramedullary tumor. Treatment with surgery, radiation therapy and chemotherapy was performed. The patient is now disease free 3 years after treatment. To the best of our knowledge, this is the first report of a patient with synchronous intradural, extramedullary, and metastatic spinal meningioma.
